THE HISTORY

The Tattershall Castle is a unique floating vessel on the river Thames in the heart of London. Situated just opposite the London Eye, the Tattershall Castle is a perfect venue for those special times with friends or guests. It is the best place to offer exhilarating panoramic views of London's hot spots and it has been a popular London attraction for more than 20 years.

The Tattershall Castle was built by W. Gray & Co in 1934 and was a vital passenger link across the Humber Estuary ferrying passengers across the stretch of treacherous water between Hull and New Holland. The paddle steamer made about eight trips a day carrying up to 1050 passengers in three compartments and on the deck. Apart from her role as a passenger vessel, the Tattershall Castle had space on board for cars and livestock. Sheep, pigs, cattle and horses could all be carried for the 40 minute journey.

More than 1 000 000 passengers were ferried during its 40 years of operation. During the war the Tattershall Castle was commandeered for a short period as a tethering vessel for barrage balloons on the Humber Estuary. This role was however short-lived. The transportation of troops and vital ammunition and supplies across the Humber proved far too important to allow the Tattershall Castle away from the estuary.

War time also saw the Tattershall Castle become the first civil vessel to carry radar. Her radar proved crucial on the foggy Humber. Just after the war during a routine crossing her radar picked up an unidentified floating object on the screen, on investigation the crew found part of Britain's first oil rig which had broken loose from its mooring during a storm.

After the war it carried on its business as a ferry. In 1973, urgent repair work to her boilers was deemed too costly for her to carry on as a ferry and as a result the Tattershall Castle was retired from service.

In 1981, she was converted to a bar and restaurant and has been considered one of the capital's best ever since.
